Alexa now follows you around the room - and if that doesn't disturb you in any way, the Echo Show 10 is a very good smart device. Physically, the third-generation Echo Show 10 is a more imposing beast than its predecessor, with a screen mounted on a new and surprisingly large barrel-shaped speaker base. It has the ability to follow you around - not from room to room (thankfully), but the screen rotates to point its face at you when you are interacting with it. Both the speaker and camera performance have been significantly improved from the previous-generation model, The Amazon Echo Show 10 can be used as a security camera, letting you view a live feed from its camera in the Alexa app. This guide provides fine analysis of the working modules of Echo Show 10, presenting a step-by-step account of how to peel out the very best of your new smart display.
