When Jack Thorne was given the assignment to protect a corporate whistleblower in the wealthy town of Westport, Connecticut, he is thrown into a passionate romance that would result in a daring escape with a fatal end. Thorne loses the will to remain in Connecticut where all he has left is the bottom of one liquor bottle after the next. His ego and reputation had been destroyed after the police department finds out that he had broken the rules of conduct. With the killer long gone and no leads as to his whereabouts, Thorne decides to pack up what few belongings he has and moves as far away from Connecticut as he can. Thorne lands in Hawaii and soon afterwards opens a private investigation agency. One night at his local eatery in the mist of his depressed and aggravated state, a mysterious woman sits at his table. She is desperate, distraught, and begs Thorne for his help in finding her missing brother. The case takes Thorne through twists and turns, fleeing for his life from several drug kingpins, a pair of assault friendly foes, and a raging storm that will push Thorne to his breaking point. Thorne has the case of his lifetime to save not only a missing client's brother but also himself. Aloha.
