In 1732, the 13 colonies were complete. As the colonies were established throughout the 17th and 18th centuries, the population grew immensely, starting at just 2,000 people and rising to over 2 million. During this time, many American Indians were displaced. The colonies all had similar constitutions, legal systems, and political systems in place.

In 1775, Philadelphia was the largest city by population (40,000), followed by New York (21,000), and then Boston (17,000). The nature of colonial trade in North America had changed more than anywhere else in the British global trading empire.
