In the first five centuries of the common era, the kiss was a distinctive and near-ubiquitous marker of Christianity. Although Christians did not invent the kiss—Jewish and pagan literature is filled with references to kisses between lovers, family members, and individuals in relationships of power and subordination—Christians kissed one another in highly specific settings and in ways that set them off from the non-Christian population.

Christians kissed each other during prayer, Eucharist, baptism, and ordination and in connection with greeting, funerals, monastic vows, and martyrdom. As Michael Philip Penn shows in Kissing Christians, this ritual kiss played a key role in defining group membership and strengthening the social bond between the communal body and its individual members.
Kissing Christians presents the first comprehensive study of the ritual kiss and how controversies surrounding it became part of larger debates and group cohesion, kissing regarding the internal practices and purity concerns, structure of Christian and how Christian leaders used communities and their the motif of the kiss of Judas relations with outsiders. Penn to examine theological notions traces how Christian writers of loyalty, unity, exalted those who kissed only forgiveness, hierarchy, and fellow Christians, proclaimed subversion. Exploring that Jews did not have a kiss, connections between bodies, prohibited exchanging the kiss power, and performance, with potential heretics, Kissing Christians bridges the privileged the confessor's gap between cultural and kiss, prohibited Christian men liturgical approaches to and women from kissing each antiquity. It breaks other, and forbade laity from significant new ground in its kissing clergy. Kissing application of literary and Christians also investigates sociological theory to connections between kissing liturgical history and will have a profound impact on these fields.

Jeff Williams is an aging, well-known writer who recently lost his beloved wife to cancer. Marilyn was his everything. Both writers, they fit together like puzzle pieces, and without her, hes not sure how to hang on. He has some help from his neighbor and close friend, Alice, but nothing can fill the gaping hole left behind by the loss of his spouse. While working on a manuscript about the joys of his marriage, Jeff falls into a serious bout of writers block. He knows its due to the loss of Marilyn, and he barely cares, hurling his typewriter from the window. Thats when Alice steps in and suggests a therapist, Dr. Joan Steele. Joan will help fix Jeffs writers block--and hopefully more. Joan tries conventional methods of psychiatric treatment, but nothing gets through to Jeff. She realizes she's going to have to be a bit unconventional to break this man's grief. They experiment with an unorthodox treatment method, and both Jeff and Joan are surprised at the results as together they slowly, carefully move past turmoil and fall into love.

The third book in the Seaside Seasons series, Cass's mother, father, and nephew all need her—but have Cass's dreams gotten lost in the crunch? The proud proprietor of her own bed-and-breakfast in sleepy Seaside, New Jersey, Cass Merton is intrigued by Dan Harmon, who arrives at SeaSong for an extended stay. After witnessing the collapse of the Twin Towers in New York City, the godly finance specialist is rethinking his life, career, and relationships—or lack of them. Meanwhile, Cass is questioning her consent to care for her easygoing nephew and feisty teenage niece for a whole year while their parents work in the Middle East. Add in Cass's four brothers, who don't take Dad's compulsive contest entries and Mom's increasing dementia one bit seriously, and her emotions swirl like the quickly rising hurricane that's fast approaching Seaside. But everyday cares aren't Cass's only problems. And when a troubled, young employee unknowingly endangers her, and Cass is taken hostage by a gunman, Dan will have to look urgently to the Lord for help.
