The big difference in the guidelines is in the criteria for the examination. The 1995 criteria require less to be documented for the exam, but the exam criteria are vague and generally leave much to the opinion of the auditor, easily opening the door for differing opinion between auditor and physician.

The first audit of those codes showed such high error rates that CMS (then the Health Care Financing Administration) released the 1995 Documentation Guidelines for Evaluation and Management Services to quantify the information needed for each key component (i.e., history, examination, and medical decision-making). The guidelines provided rules about specifics physicians need to document for coders to assign the different levels of E/M visits.
