A Darker Place is the story of Anne Waverly, a college
professor who goes undercover for the FBI to evaluate religious cults. I was fascinated for the first half of the book, not only by the unusual characters and their finely detailed development, but also by the in-depth

information about
cults and how they are evaluated by the government (much of it delivered in headnotes to each chapter).

Anne Waverly, a professor of religious studies at a small Oregon
university, is an
erstwhile FBI
operative whose traumatic past has shaped her skills for infiltrating fringe
religious groups: 18
years before, her departure from a Texas commune
precipitated a Jonestown-like mass
suicide that claimed
her husband and
young daughter.
