A Grain of Wheat is about the events that lead up to Kenyan independence, or Uhuru. Often phlegmatic, the narrative gathers force and power as it patiently traces each person's tributary of recall to the communal estuary.

Ngugi wa Thiong'o's A Grain of Wheat is a Kenyan novel written in English, a language traditionally associated with colonialism and oppression in Africa. Despite the fact that the novel is written in English, Ngugi still uses language to speak to the novel's theme of revolution by incorporating his native Gikuyu in the form of proverbs and folk songs.
