Process Addiction and
the Addictive Brain

Addiction involves craving for something
intensely, loss of
control over its use,
and continuing
involvement with it
despite adverse
consequences.

Addiction changes the brain, first by
subverting the way it
registers pleasure and then by corrupting
other normal drives
such as learning and motivation.

Process addictions occur when someone becomes addicted to a rewarding behaviour that does not involve an addictive
substance, such as gambling, sex, or eating. Sometimes referred to as behavioural addictions, or compulsive behaviours, process
addictions involve compulsion to perform an action despite negative consequences.
