"[...]and the Old World, -intentionally by commercial, exploring, or warlike expeditions, or accidentally by shipwreck, -previous to the voyages of the Northmen in the tenth century; yet that such communication did take place, in many instances and at different periods, is extremely probable." The emigrants of whom we have spoken are supposed to have been nomadic, to have first built cities in the north, -that is, the present United States; it is not improbable that they were the mound-builders of Ohio and the Mississippi valleys, and that they afterward migrated southward into Mexico. These pioneers were called Toltecs, [...
