Towards the end of
Between the Woods
and the Water, Paddy is exploring
the Danube which he described as wild,
with 'many scourges
to contend with'
including the Kossovar winds which in the spring
could 'reach a speed of fifty or sixty miles an hour
and turn the river
into a convulsed
inferno.'

Between The Water and the Woods is a beautifully written story that feels more like an ageless fable than a contemporary novel. The characters are nuanced and the plot is filled with action and adventure. Unlike many books targeting a younger audience, we have a parent fully involved

(and respected) in the story.

AND THE WATER differs
only slightly from A TIME OF GIFTS in that fewer architectural treasures are encountered and commented upon. But, like the latter, it is the beauty and quiet of the earth, the common people, an endearing cast of lovable, clueless aristocrats, and the colorful histories that surround them all, that are the stars of the show.
