John Boswell's Christianity, Social Tolerance, and Homosexuality was published in 1980. It sparked immediate controversy because of its claims about the general tolerance toward homoeroticism among ancient Romans, early Christians, and the peoples of the early and High Middle Ages.

Christianity, Social Tolerance, and Homosexuality: Gay ...

The author argues that Christians' early tolerance of same-sex attraction and acts began to change when Rome fell and society became more rural. He cites good evidence for the claim that Christians today view "homosexuality" as a graver sin than our predecessors (his evidence includes penitentials and laws about male prostitutes).
