Throughout Contempt, Moravia

satirizes a character who has embraced a very schematic version of Freudianism. Moravia suggests that ratiocination is a poor substitute for taste. One of his great themes is how sensibility is wrecked by negotiations with other people, other classes, other individuals, and thereby reinvigorated.

In Alberto Moravia's Contempt (Il Disprezzo, 1954), a young screenwriter, Riccardo Molteni, narrates the dissolution of his marriage to Emelia against the backdrop of his having been hired to write a film adaptation of Homer's The Odyssey. Moravia takes Homer's characterization of Ulysses' twin hungers "for home and wife" and literalizes them into a disturbingly bleak yet acidly comic depiction of a modern man trying to comprehend his wife's contempt for him.
