Add the garlic, shallot and cayenne in some olive oil in a large cast-iron pot or Dutch oven on your stovetop. Put a sprinkle of sea salt on top, and cook about 10 minutes, until the garlic and shallot are sizzling and have softened. Put the cleaned mussels into the pan and stir, to get all the flavors combined.

Cooking with Fernet Branca is set in what both of the main characters hope is a quiet, secluded corner of Italy. The two neighbours, Gerald and Martha, both foreigners abroad (Gerald is British, Marta from an Eastern European country in considerable turmoil), each want their peace and quiet -- and were assured they'd get it by the property agent.

Cooking with Fernet Branca - James Hamilton-Paterson

The wide-ranging James Hamilton-Paterson has published all sorts of books, from Gerontius, a Whitbread Award-winning novel about the composer Elgar, to a study of Ferdinand Marcos. His prose is always original and extremely winning, and he himself lives in Italy, to which, among other things, Cooking with Fernet Branca is a sly love letter.

If Cooking With Fernet Branca has a weak spot, it is a rather rushed and chaotic ending - yet not one that is terribly closely related to the farcical misunderstandings. It's more just chaos for its own sake and the novel might have been stronger without it. But this is a minor blemish on an otherwise rather wonderful comic novel.
