"Darconville 's Cat " : The Power and Glory of Vengeance Writ

Darconville's Cat by Alexander Theroux Lexicographic madness and Rabelaisian excess characterize this long novel of love, hate, madness, revenge and - perhaps - grace. Some chapters (particularly those pertaining to academia) are among the most hilariously misanthropic I ' ve ever read.

Alaric Darconville teaches English to the young Virginia women of Quinsy College. He writes fiction, is considered eligible by the co-eds, and soon enough gives up his rather ingenuous, un-modern heart to one of them: Isabel Rawsthorne, she of the hillbilly-background, angelic face, and elephantine legs. Wild transport ensues; even when Darconville goes briefly to England and then is invited ...

Darconville 's Cat Quotes by Alexander Theroux

The first two-thirds of Alexander Theroux' Darconville's Cat constitute one of the most powerful love stories I know of, on an equal plane with Sons and Lovers and Wuthering Heights. It is also a very penetrating, witty, yet passionate portrayal of an insanely aristocratic, self-preoccupied Virginia academic community.

Darconville's Cat book by Alexander Theroux

Reading Alexander Theroux is like reading a reincarnation of Edgar Allan Poe with a vast knowledge of words; I say this because they both have a lot of melancholic issues surrounding their writing, or so it seems from reading Darconville's Cat and Poe's poetry. Darconville's Cat by Alexander Theroux, Paperback | Barnes ...

Darconville's Cat is a novel about love and hate. Among other matters, it deals with the delicate tensions between Life and Art, the Ideal and the Real, God and Satan, and, above all, with the crises and conflicts between Man and Woman, the tragic implications of which reach all the way back to the Primal Fall.

Darconville's Cat is boring and brilliant, both puerile and profound, self-indulgent and often cruel. Theroux lacks Thomas Pynchon's interest in this century and the popular humor of Gilbert Sorrentino's Mulligan Stew, the novel Theroux's most closely resembles. "Madness," Darconville says of a book very like the one in which he is a character.
