The New York Times bestseller that gives readers a paradigm-shattering new way to think about motivation from the author of When: The Scientific Secrets of Perfect Timing Most people believe that the best way to motivate is with rewards like money—the carrot-and-stick approach. That's a mistake, says Daniel H. Pink (author of To Sell Is Human: The Surprising Truth About Motivating Others). In this provocative and persuasive new book, he asserts that the secret to high performance and satisfaction—at work, at school, and at home—is the deeply human need to direct our own lives, to learn and create new things, and to do better by ourselves and our world. Drawing on four decades of scientific research on human motivation, Pink exposes the mismatch between what science knows and what business does—and how that affects every aspect of life. He examines the three elements of true motivation—autonomy, mastery, and purpose—and offers smart and surprising techniques for putting these into action in a unique book that will change how we think and transform how we live.

Abstract: Commercial truck drivers are at a considerable disadvantage when it comes to healthy eating and exercise while at work and during downtime. Consequently, truck drivers face high rates of obesity and cardiovascular disease risk factors. The purpose of this project was to develop a nutrition curriculum in the form of a workbook for local, regional, and over-the-road (OTR) truck drivers to be used as a stand-alone resource or as part of a workplace health promotion program. The goal of this workbook is to provide information on general nutrition and healthy eating patterns, nutrition for disease prevention, estimating nutrition needs, food purchasing, safety, and meal preparation, physical activity, and goal setting, all tailored to the needs of truck drivers. Curriculum development was based on a literature review on the health status of truck drivers and topics identified in an evidenced-based workplace health promotion program assessment tool. This workbook was reviewed for alignment with current evidence and relevancy by a professional committee, including two Registered Dietitian Nutritionists (RDNs) who work in health promotion, and one truck driver. This workbook is one resource that truck drivers can use to improve their nutrition knowledge and health behaviors if motivated to do so. Future work could include the development of a web or app-based nutrition program for truck drivers to focus on knowledge or research to improve the food choice environment at truck stops.
