Determining a Federal Guideline Sentence | Sentencing Manual Federal Sentencing Guidelines. Prior to the 1980s, the federal courts used an indeterminate sentencing system, which allowed trial judges to impose sentences entirely at their discretion. Research, however, revealed that this system created sentencing disparities in which different criminals received very different sentences for the same crime. Federal Sentencing Guidelines The law created a Sentencing Commission, which produced a Guidelines Manual that specifies sentences for almost all federal crimes. The manual uses a points system that “awards” points according to type of offense, how it was committed, and an offender’s
