Here are the six qualities we look for when evaluating what to publish:

1. Expertise: You don't have to be well known to be a contributor, but you must know a lot about the subject you're writing about. 2.

Evidence: It's not enough to know your subject deeply — you have to prove it to the reader.

As an educator, there are so many things to take away from this blurb on their website. Only 900 words, but well-written (no irony there) clear, and helpful. This all applies to your business writing and presentations. Read on. 1) Clear point of view. Their very first sentence. At the Harvard Business Review, we believe in Management. Boom.

Author Guidelines - MIT Sloan Management Review

First published in 1922, the Harvard Business Review is one of the nation's leading publications devoted to business and management issues. HBR describes its target audience as senior managers and wants articles of interest to these readers that present new ideas or novel perspectives on issues. The emphasis is on practicality, meaning articles should present information that managers can use and that are grounded in the real world.
