Research in natural products has advanced tremendously through the fields of chemistry, life, food and material sciences. Comparisons of natural products from microorganisms, lower eukaryotes, animals, higher plants and marine organisms are now well documented. Natural products are ubiquitous in our everyday lives. They are active constituents of many medicines, vitamins, food additives, flavours and fragrances, agrochemicals and pesticides used for plant protection. Most of the natural products are optically active.

Stonewalled is a novelized true story. When the United States government passed new environmental laws under the 2010 Clean Air Act to dramatically reduce carbon and related exhaust gases from fossil fuels, two young automotive geniuses responded. Utilizing their knowledge and experience gained in their Formula One Racing careers, they set out to perfect a technology that would achieve the federal government's guidelines to reduce exhaust emissions and increase fuel efficiencies. With the government's focus on diesel engines, the twin brothers refined their technology to change the very nature of diesel fuel so it would be thoroughly consumed in conventional diesel engines. The twin's new system could be added to existing diesels engines utilized in heavy trucks, construction equipment, ocean going vessels and sea ports. After ten years and millions of dollars spent on research and development, having passed every federal testing protocol, their new technology was perfected and proven in field trials and in the nation's most sophisticated testing laboratories. The new fuel system offered an increase of 25 percent to 50 percent fuel efficiency while reducing exhaust emissions below the proposed 2010 air quality standards. It seemed a foregone conclusion that the United States government would welcome the new technology with open arms. Instead, the industrial and financial 'elite' who control the nation's lobby-based government reared its ugly head. This new technology was forced into prolonged bureaucratic red tape and unexplainable harassment. Ultimately the twins' miraculous technology was denied federal approval and certification, ending in the death of a world altering technology. Now the nation is faced with the Green New Deal and the banning of all fossil fuel. The author was intrigued with nature from childhood. Seeing the pristine spring fed river of his youth irreversibly polluted, he devoted his life to the abatement and remediation of pollution. After college the author worked for the state water quality agency and took part in restoring the Houston Ship Channel, which was among the nation's most polluted waterways. After leaving the state the author went on to found eleven environmental corporations providing design, construction, and operations of treatment and remediation services. Now retired, the author and his wife enjoy the outdoors, fishing, hunting, and tending their country property.

This volume decentres the view of urbanisation in India from large agglomerations towards smaller urban settlements. It presents the outcomes of original research conducted over three years on subaltern processes of urbanization. The volume is organised in four sections. A first one deals with urbanisation dynamics and systems of cities with chapters on the new census towns, demographic and economic trajectories of cities and employment transformation. The interrelations of land transformation, social and cultural changes form the topic of the " land, society, belonging " section based on ethnographic work in various parts of India (Karnataka, Himachal Pradesh, Arunachal Pradesh and Tamil Nadu). A third section focuses on public policies, governance and urban services with a set of macro-analysis based papers and specific case studies. Understanding the nature of production and innovation in non-metropolitan contexts closes this volume. Finally, though focused on India, this research raises larger questions with regard to the study of urbanisation and development worldwide.

Recently separated from his nagging, ill-tempered wife of thirteen years, millionaire businessman Mohan Kumar decides to reinvent his life. Convinced that 'lust is the true foundation of love', he embarks on an audacious plan: he will advertise for paid lady companions to share his bed and his life. Thus begins his journey of easy, unbridled sexuality in the company of some remarkable women. There is Sarojini Bharadwai, the demure professor from small-town Haryana who surprises Mohan with her ardour and sexual energy; Molly Gomes, the free-spirited masseuse from Goa, mistress of the sensual impulse; and Susanthika Goonatilleke, the diminutive seductress from Sri Lanka. After each affair ends and before the next begins, Mohan finds solace in the practiced charms of his obliging maid, Dhanno, and in the memories of his first lovers: the American Jessica Browne, to whom he lost his virginity, and the Pakistani Yasmeen Wanchoo, who brought him the heady passion of an older woman. In The Company of Women, Khushwant Singh, India's most widely read author, has produced an uninhibited, erotic and endlessly entertaining celebration of love, sex and passion.
