The tested model of the Holden Captiva was introduced in Australia during 2006. The Holden Captiva scored 12.23 out of 16 in the offset crash test. The passenger compartment held its shape well. Protection from serious leg injury was marginal for the driver and passenger.

Holden Captiva 2006 review More importantly, the compact Captiva is much more Holden than the sadly inadequate Barina, which opened the batting for the General's Korean business plans. This time around, Holden's engineers and designers got to the project table in time for the first course, when the Captiva was little more than a borrowed platform and a vision for a global car.

The Captiva was ultimately Holden's answer to the demand for an SUV and the Korean-built wagon launched in 2006. On the surface it delivered — it was stylish, the driving position was sufficiently elevated and it could fit the driver and six passengers.
