Writing from Third Person Limited Point of View

Writing in the third person is writing using the third person point of view. This involves using pronoun such as him, her, it or them. This is quite different from the first-person point of view which predominantly uses pronouns such as I and me and the second person point of view in which the main pronouns used are you and yours. The beauty of writing in the third person is that it gives your work an element of objectivity and flexibility.

Before you write a single word of fiction, you will need to decide who is telling the story – and from which point of view. If the story is told by a narrator (rather than by a character), you will be writing from the third person perspective.. But who is the narrator?

Using a narrator, characters, dialogue, and descriptive details, your third grader's writing should show a story unfolding – including how the characters feel and respond to what happens. The sequence of events should be clear. Be sure not to let your child's story simply stop by writing "The End".
