Damage to buildings and civil engineering structures in Sweden costs several thousand millions of Swedish kronor every year. Much of this damage is caused by moisture. Moisture damage is also one of the contributory factors in the incidence of sick buildings. This book discusses how long concrete structures must be allowed to dry out after construction in order that damage to adjoining structures and surface finishes may be avoided. Materials which come into contact with concrete can be damaged if the concrete is damp. This damage may take different forms, such as blistering in floor coverings, mould, rot, increased emission of chemicals, etc. The book is addressed mainly to contractors, consultants and building owners. Great care has been taken in describing measurement results and measuring and sampling methods.
