Per Petterson's first published novel, "In the Wake" takes the reader on a journey of grief- related depression with Arvid, a Norwegian stoic with a desire to write novels. Translated by Ann Borne in 2003, the novel's sentence structure is tortured and the tone is somber and hopeless in the early chapters.

" In the Wake is a slow exercise in avoidance by digression. Petterson writes with a grim, morbid hand, allowing hope in only at the very last minute. His words have a music reminiscent of W. G. Sebald, though with fewer grace notes. Tastefully translated by Anne Born, the novel swells with muted lyricism."
