In 1919, White used his own pale skin to pass for a white and investigate lynchings in the deep South. Inspired by White's experiences, Johnson tells the similar story of Harlem journalist Zane Pinchback, whose own eyewitness reports of lynchings are regularly written up in a New York periodical under the byline Incognegro.

Mat Johnson was an African American kid growing up in a black neighborhood. Only thing was that he looks white. Apparently his mother tried everything to make him seem blacker, even making him wear traditional African clothes at times, but that only made things worse. He hated feeling different, but he had a Incognegro by Mat Johnson - Chron
