Indigo Clemens J Setz

What drew me to Indigo, the newly-translated novel from Austrian wunderkind Clemens J. Setz, was its premise. Setz imagines an alternate dawn to the twenty-first century wherein a new medical condition is discovered: a congenital disorder that causes—in all those within ten yards of the afflicted—intense vertigo, nausea, and headaches.

His alter ego, math teacher Clemens Setz, interns at a school in Graz for children diagnosed with Indigo, a disorder that causes dizziness, nausea, diarrhea, and other symptoms in nearby people.

Clemens soon notices that some children are “relocated” from the school, and he claims investigating their whereabouts leads to his firing—but suggestions of alcoholism and mental illness undermine his reliability.

Clemens Setz' breakout novel introduces us to a young math teacher named Clemens Setz (fun fact: the author has a degree in...well, you guessed it) who works at an enigmatic school for so-called indigo children, kids whose aura causes people around them to feel physically sick. Yup. Setz, the teacher, realizes that some of these children are regularly masked and relocated, and when he ventures to find out what exactly happens to them, he is fired.

And once more from the beginning. Forget about this plot summary of a novel that resists all summarisation, and just read the book: Indigo by Clemens J. Setz, the long-awaited novel by the author of the successful short story collection Die Liebe zur Zeit des Mahlstädter Kindes (Leipzig Book Fair Prize 2011, 40,000 copies sold). Devilishly exciting and as refreshing as a good massage.

Clemens J. Setz: Indigo: Die X-Akten des postmodernen ...

The stories keep turning back on themselves, and almost everyone is totally crazy. Tätzl is an asshole. Setz—the narrator—is a drunk and possibly a murderer. The photographs, histories, and asides keep intruding. Like so many really great novels, Indigo teaches you how to read it as you go. I struggled through the opening, then found myself reading the most entertaining book I'd read all year, at once charming and horrible, like a serial killer on a TV show.
