What drew me to Indigo, the newly-translated novel from Austrian wunderkind Clemens J. Setz, was its premise. Setz imagines an alternate dawn to the twenty-first century wherein a new medical condition is discovered: a congenital disorder that causes—in all those within ten yards of the afflicted—intense vertigo, nausea, and headaches.

Clemens J. Setz' neuer Roman "Indigo" ist mit Sicherheit der Grausamste dieser Literatursaison, glaubt Rezensent Jens Jessen, der dieses "Meisterwerk" gerade deshalb empfehlen kann. Dennoch warnt der Kritiker vor den Kopfschmerzen, die die Lektüre bereiten könne.

And once more from the beginning. Forget about this plot summary of a novel that resists all summarisation, and just read the book: Indigo by Clemens J. Setz, the long-awaited novel by the author of the successful short story collection Die Liebe zur Zeit des Mahlstädter Kindes (Leipzig Book Fair Prize 2011, 40,000 copies sold). Devilishly exciting and as refreshing as a good massage.

The stories keep turning back on themselves, and almost everyone is totally crazy. Tätzl is an asshole. Setz—the narrator—is a drunk and possibly a murderer. The photographs, histories, and asides keep intruding. Like so many really great novels, Indigo teaches you how to read it as you go. I struggled through the opening, then found myself reading the most entertaining book I'd read all year, at once charming and horrible, like a serial killer on a TV show.
