Zombies, radioactive meatloaf, baseball, math, chainsaws. Welcome to Zombie Elementary. Larry Mullet is your typical fourth grader. He's not the biggest kid or the smartest kid or the best looking kid. He rides his bike, plays baseball, takes the school bus, avoids cafeteria food, and--oh yeah, he's a zombie hunting expert. Larry was just doing his usual thing when Alex Bates from Ms Hoag's class tried to eat him. Sadly, that was only the beginning. Something odd was going on at Brooks Elementary... and it was up to Larry and his friends to take charge (for some reason). Hilariously told interview-style as a record of the REAL story, and peppered with zombie tips and facts, zombie cheerleaders and plenty of gore, this book will be a surefire hit for anyone interested in a ghoulishly good life-or-death comedy.

This Capstone investigates the strategies that are most effective in helping upper elementary students successfully and easily choose just-right books for themselves. It documents one fourth-grade teacher's efforts to identify classroom practices that most effectively teach these strategies, and describes not only the strategies that proved most successful for students, but the most beneficial means of teaching and reinforcing them in a classroom setting. The author cites relevant research findings and professional writings on the topic, and combines these with the results of a year-long study to develop a clear summary of what really works for students. Among the most beneficial strategies for students were an exposure to and familiarity with a variety of writing genres, use of personal reading journals and reflective writing, an understanding of the best sources for finding ideas for new books, and a strong understanding of personal reading needs and preferences.

The author argues that we must focus again on genuine curiosity, individual choice, big blocks of time, quality conversations, and powerful children's literature"--
