Camp New Beginnings isn't the safe place Matt Voorhees thought it was. An intense flood stole the life of one of the nine survivors. And now all that remain from their cryocolumn are eight seventeen-year-olds and a troubled man named Darin, who Matt doesn't trust. They still don't know where the cryovault is and are no closer to finding it, due to a monstrous snowstorm forcing them to stay put. But they know they're running out of time. Dr. Westbrook is dead, and there is no one tending to the over five thousand pods of cryogenically frozen people—the last of the human race. Continued erratic weather halts them at every turn, and the body count is adding up. In their race to find their families and save the population, they uncover more things that are out of place, and the mystery deepens. Matt begins to question if he can even save himself—let alone the rest of the world. Welcome to Camp New Beginnings—where the weather is just as dysfunctional as its residents.
