Feeling Loved and being OK with who you are is a God-given right and an obligation to both ourselves and to those who are most dear to us. Sometimes we find it hard to love and honor ourselves when others don't -- especially our parents who, perhaps, can't show it. If you are someone you know and love struggle with not feeling loved and cared for, often the seeds of such unhappiness were planted early on in life. This is not a death sentence and, if you want to be happy, you can learn to love yourself no matter what your circumstance and learn to remove the resentment, anger, and self-pity from your life and vocabulary. You can learn to take care of yourself no matter what and to never need the approval of others to determine how you feel Everything in your life is a choice -- the attitude you take, how you think, what you believe and how you act -- these are all in your control. I am going to show you how to make better choices that will help you feel the way you want and deserve without the use of mind-altering substances. We can decide to have life "do us," or we can choose to "do life." I chose to "do life. Each breath you take today is the best time to change - a golden opportunity to repurpose and reboot yourself and your life. There is every reason to have HOPE and to believe that things can change. NEVER give up that wonderful sense of hope! I didn't and neither do you. All it takes is a decision and a leap of faith. You have everything to gain and nothing to lose - except for your misery which I will happily refund. You have every reason to have hope and to believe that there is something better waiting for you. But, first you need to summon your trust and faith that with great and concerted effort, you can and must change. And to that end, I've written this book to save you from yourself. You've already made the decision to reach out and ask for help. So, put down the bat, give yourself a much deserved break and spend the next few days together to learn "How to Love Yourself." Let's take your deep-seeded pain and despair and transform it into positive action and meaningful change.

Together, we can and will make a difference in your life and the lives of others. My hope and wish for you is that you seize this powerful opportunity to get real with yourself. To look honestly at the many choices you have made that got you where you are today. And to harness the courage to identify and confront those areas of your life that you are not happy with and that are begging for attention and to change them once and for all.

The Everything Essential German Book Robert Zientara

The Mom Test is a quick, practical guide that will save you time, money, and heartbreak. They say you shouldn't ask your mom whether your business is a good idea, because she loves you and will lie to you. This is technically true, but it misses the point. You shouldn't ask anyone if your business is a good idea. It's a bad question and everyone will lie to you at least a little. As a matter of fact, it's not their responsibility to tell you the truth. It's your responsibility to find it and it's worth doing right. Talking to customers is one of the foundational skills of both Customer Development and Lean Startup. We all know we're supposed to do it, but nobody seems willing to admit that it's easy to screw up and hard to do right. This book is going to show you how customer conversations go wrong and how you can do better.

The Angry Therapist who has helped thousands of men find more happiness in their relationships and more purpose in their lives now shares his insights with everyone in this powerful guide—self-help in a shotglass—covering essential topics, from vulnerability and posturing to workouts and women. Deep in post-divorce soul searching, John Kim came to an astonishing realization: he was a miserable f*ck who might just be to blame for the problems in his life. Armed with this new insight, he began The Angry Therapist blog—an admission that, while he was a licensed therapist and life coach, he was no better than the people who sought his advice. In his first post, "My Fucking Feelings," he wrote about the struggles and shortcomings that had led him to this point. As his work caught on, catapulting him into the role of unlikely and unconventional guide for thousands of people all over the world, Kim evolved from behaving like a boy to living like a man—and showed his clients how to do so as well. In I Used to Be a Miserable F*ck, Kim delivers the dos and don'ts for stepping up and into manhood, which he defines by transparency and strength of character, not six-pack abs or a corner office. With his signature no-nonsense approach that will make you laugh and think, Kim takes you on a rugged, rough and tumble road trip of self-exploration and discovery, sharing his wisdom and insights, such as why: Being nice is for boys, and being kind is for men Scheduling man dates could make you a better friend, lover, and human being Peeing in the shower is a sign of a larger problem Arguing, judging, and answering, "I dunno" are keeping you from a healthy relationship, a great career, and a happy life We are not born men. We are born boys. The transition from misery to meaning is an internal process that requires work: reflection, pain, courage, and sometimes, a rebirth. Kim knows because he's been there. The truth is, men weren't meant to just pay bills and die. With this book as your guide, you will love hard, walk tall, and find a life filled with purpose and passion.

A comprehensive introduction to the idea of intertextuality and the debates surrounding it. The author focuses on the four key thinkers whose work has been central to these debates - Kristeva, Barthes, Bloom and Genette. With an innovative perspective, the author guides the reader through the original texts of each of these. Of special importance is the author's reading (and translation) of other parts of Kristeva's Semeiotik. Orr's investigation takes a fresh approach to the rival French critics - Angenot, Derrida, Girard and Ricoeur - who also worked on intertextuality and tackles the language of intertextuality, shining new light on some of the terminology most commonly associated with this concept.

World-renowned economist Klaus Schwab, Founder and Executive Chairman of the World Economic Forum, explains that we have an opportunity to shape the fourth industrial revolution, which will fundamentally alter how we live and work. Schwab argues that this revolution is different in scale, scope and complexity from any that have come before. Characterized by a range of new technologies that are fusing the physical, digital and biological worlds, the developments are affecting all disciplines, economies, industries and governments, and even challenging ideas about what it means to be human. Artificial intelligence is already all around us, from supercomputers, drones and virtual assistants to 3D printing, DNA sequencing, smart thermostats, wearable sensors and microchips smaller than a grain of sand. But this is just the beginning: nanomaterials 200 times stronger than steel and a million times thinner than a strand of hair and the first transplant of a 3D printed liver are already in development. Imagine "smart factories" in which global systems of manufacturing are coordinated virtually, or implantable mobile phones made of biosynthetic materials. The fourth industrial revolution, says Schwab, is more significant, and its ramifications more profound, than in any prior period of human history. He outlines the key technologies driving this revolution and discusses the major impacts expected on government, business, civil society and individuals. Schwab also offers bold ideas on how to harness these changes and shape a better future—one in which technology empowers people rather than replaces them; progress serves society rather than disrupts it; and in which innovators respect moral and ethical boundaries rather than cross them. We all have the opportunity to contribute to developing new frameworks that advance progress.

When pressed, a trigger point can cause sharp pain at its location along with pain in related areas of the body. Trigger points can be caused by strain, stress, trauma and even smoking. They are usually located and diagnosed by complaints of pain and manual palpation. A chart of common trigger points would assist the patient in understanding muscle systems and referred pain.
