This edited volume looks at supreme courts in China and the West. It examines the differences and similarities between the Supreme People's Court of Mainland China and those that follow Western models. It also offers a comparative study of a selection of supreme courts in Europe and Latin America. The contributors argue that the Supreme Courts should give guidance to the development of the law and provide legal unity. For China, the Chinese author argues, that therefore there should be more emphasis on the procedure for reopening cases. The chapters on Western-style supreme courts argue that there should be adequate access filters; the procedure of reopening cases is considered to be problematic from the perspective of the finality of the administration of justice. In addition, the authors discuss measures that allow supreme courts in both regions to deal with their existing caseload, to reduce this caseload, and to avoid divergences in the case law of the supreme court. This volume offers ideas that will help supreme courts in both the East and the West to remove unmanageable caseloads. As a result, these courts will be better able to assist in the interpretation and clarification of the law, to provide for legal unity, and to give guidance to the development of the law.

This book was written for the poor prisoner that is not able or equipped to properly present themselves in a court of law. He explains the dos and donts in preparing for an appeal. Some procedures in the book have been developed through the trial and error process. Rick is confident that if the book procedures are followed, an appeal will be successful. This book will assist you when there is no hope in your struggle for justice.

Civil Appeals

Excerpt from The Law Quarterly Review, 1886, Vol. 2 Two opposite views appear to be entertained as to the manner in which this all-important subject of the increase of appeals should be dealt with. According to the opinion of some a salutary check should be imposed upon the liberty to appeal by prohibiting appeals in cases where the pecuniary amount at stake falls below a certain minimum, unless special leave to appeal be given. This solution is not without its drawbacks. The importance to the parties of an appeal is often wholly incommensurate with the pecuniary sum that is in controversy, while the gravity of the legal question involved bears no relation to such sum at all. The opinion of the profession does not seem to favour the plan of making the right of appeal dependent on the leave of the judges whose decision it is desired to impugn. Such a rule of practice always leaves the suitor dissatisfied. On the other hand, to impose on the Court of Appeal the duty of determining whether leave to appeal should be granted is really to require them half to hear a case in order to decide whether they should wholly hear it. Moreover, it is exceedingly difficult for an appellate tribunal to refuse leave to appeal, if the point of law involved is open on the first blush of it to any doubt at all. The alternative scheme which many lawyers prefer is to endeavour, while frankly acknowledging that the new system does and must encourage appeals, to destroy as far as can be all double appeals, or in other words to transfer bodily to the Court of Appeal some substantial portion of the work done at present in the Courts in Bane. We have already pointed out the impossibility at this particular moment of directing immediately to the Appeal Court any large additional business, and will not again recur to it. To create a third division of the Appeal Court by adding three more Lords Justices to the present number would be an experiment to be adopted only in the last resort. The plan of prohibiting interlocutory appeals, and allowing final appeals only to penetrate to the Appeal Court, which some have suggested, does not recognize sufficiently the fact that the Interlocutory Paper in Chancery includes matters of the utmost moment, and that even in the Queen's Bench the new trial paper falls into the Interlocutory list. Upon the other hand, to withdraw from the Appeal Court appeals on matters of practice only, would be to withdraw from it a very slight amount of business, for the appeals on points of pure practice are becoming every day fewer and fewer. The conclusion towards which the preceding observations tend, is that the Appeal business will probably for the present have to be left much in its present condition, and that we must trust to time to show whether the relief of the Lords Justices from circuit will not before long bring the Appeal arrears within control. The Model Rules of Professional Conduct provides an up-to-date resource for information on legal ethics. Federal, state and local courts in all jurisdictions look to the Rules for guidance in solving lawyer malpractice cases, disciplinary actions, disqualification issues, sanctions questions and much more. In this volume, black-letter Rules of Professional Conduct are followed by numbered Comments that explain each Rule's purpose and provide suggestions for its practical application. The Rules will help you identify proper conduct in a variety of given situations, review those instances where discretionary action is possible, and define the nature of the relationship between you and your clients, colleagues and the courts.
