Globalisation is the worldwide movement of goods, capital, people, and ideas due to increasing economic growth, propelled by the ongoing expansion of global trade and investment. In recent times, new technologies and reductions in trade barriers have hastened the speed of this global exchange, resulting in more opportunities for some and greater challenges for others. Is globalisation shared equally, or is its inexorable advancement creating nations of 'haves', and 'have-nots'? What are the key economic, environmental, cultural and equity factors in the debate over the fairness of globalisation? Can 'free' trade also be 'fair' trade? This volume contains an overview of globalisation, and presents Australian-sourced arguments for its benefits and against its negative impacts. leaf from a rainstorm five years ago and conversations from last week, month, or year. They have the ability to remember every second of everyday—since birth. This gift has blessed Mitzi with a history of being sexually assaulted by researchers and abused by her own parents. She trusts no one. Likes no one. Deuce, however, is a high school standout. His gift has made him a superstar on the football field and his memory promises him endless opportunities. When they both end up at an Alzheimer's research facility under false proviso, they quickly realize this place isn't what it seems to be. They endure crazy military-style tests, are forcefully drugged, and complete real-life simulations that haunt them. Mitzi and Deuce have no idea what the researchers want to do with them or their memories. But one thing is clear: the researchers will go to any lengths to get what they want.
