John Glassco (Author of Memoirs of Montparnasse)

I find John Glassco's Memoirs of Montparnasse to provide a breadth unavailable in those of Ernest Hemingway (A Moveable Feast), Sylvia Beach (Shakespeare and Company), Morley Callaghan (The Last Summer in Paris), and Gertrude Stein (Alice B. Toklas). Glassco was the younger of this group, the least experienced and established, one of the later

Memoirs of Montparnasse, by John Glassco | The Independent

Memoirs of Montparnasse is a delicious book about being young, restless, reckless, and without cares. It is also the best and liveliest of the many chronicles of 1920s Paris and the exploits of the lost generation. In 1928, nineteen-year-old John Glassco escaped

Montreal and his overbearing father for the wilder shores of Montparnasse.

Memoirs of Montparnasse by John Glassco
- Goodreads

Memoirs of Montparnasse epitomizes the 1920's and the Parisian literary scene.

Glassco is, of course, his own main character, and I say "character" because even Glassco admits to straddling the line between fiction and non-fiction. While the book is a collection of memoirs, three quarters of the work was produced some thirty years later.

Reading Memoirs of

Montparnasse is like running into a dear, witty old friend, one with whom you spent many a long night, many years ago, over bad red wine and spaghetti, in conversation that raged over the world of ideas and experience, a time that left the two of you ecstatic, exhausted.

Memoirs Of Montparnasse John Glassco

John Glassco's Memoirs of Montparnasse is a pack of lies, and it doesn't matter. Yes, he claims to know Joyce's Portrait of the Artist and Ulysses "almost by heart" and the entire works of every writer you've ever heard of with the possible exceptions of Walther von der Vogelweide and Giraut de Bornelh, even though he was only twenty when (he claims) he wrote this book.
