International Indigenous Art Housing Policy in AustraliaA Case for System Reform
There has been a dramatic proliferation of Islamic charities recently. While most are legitimate, considerable evidence reveals that others have more questionable intentions, and that funds have been diverted to support terrorist groups, such as al-Qaeda. The authors examine the contention through a detailed investigation of the charities involved, their financial intermediaries, and the terrorist organizations themselves. What they discover is that money from these charities has funded conflicts across the world, from the early days in Afghanistan, to subsequent terrorist activities in Asia, Africa, Palestine and, most recently, Europe and the United States.

Design for London was a unique experiment in urban planning, design and strategic thinking. Set up in 2006 by Mayor Ken Livingstone and his Architectural Advisor, Richard Rogers, the brief for the team was ‘to think about London, what made London unique and how it could be made better’. Sitting within London government but outside its formal statutory responsibilities, it was given freedom to question and challenge. The team had no power or money, but it did have the licence to operate without the usual constraints of government. With introductions from Ken Livingstone and Richard Rogers, Design for London covers the tumultuous and heady period of the first decade of this century when London was a test bed for new ideas. It outlines how key projects such as the London Olympics, public space programmes, high street regeneration and greening programmes were managed, critically examines the lessons that might be learnt in strategic urban design and considers how a design agenda for London could be developed in the future.

This book, the first comprehensive overview of housing policy in Australia in 25 years, investigates the many dimensions of housing affordability and government actions that affect affordability outcomes. It analyses the causes and implications of declining home ownership, rising rates of rental stress and the neglect of social housing, as well as the housing situation of Indigenous Australians. The book covers a period where housing policy primarily operated under a neo-liberal paradigm dominated by financial de-regulation and fiscal austerity. It critiques the broad and fragmented range of government measures that have influenced housing outcomes over this period. These include regulation, planning and tax policies as well as explicit housing programs. The book also identifies current and future housing challenges for Australian governments, recognizing these as a complex set of inter-connected problems. Drawing on its coverage of the economics, politics and administration of housing provision, the book sets out priorities for the transformational national strategy needed for a fairer and more productive housing system, and to improve affordability outcomes for the most vulnerable Australians.

Modern science is ever more driven by computations and simulations. In particular, the state of the art in space and Earth science often arises from complex simulations of climate, space weather, and astronomical phenomena. At the same time, scientific work requires data processing, presentation, and analysis through broadly available proprietary and community software.¹ Implicitly or explicitly, software is central to science. Scientific discovery, understanding, validation, and interpretation are all enhanced by access to the source code of the software used by scientists. This report investigates and recommends options for NASA's Science Mission Directorate (SMD) as it considers how to establish a policy regarding open source software to complement its existing policy on open data. In particular, the report reviews existing data and software policies and the lessons learned from the implementation of those policies, summarizes community perspectives, and presents policy options and recommendations for implementing an open source software policy for NASA SMD.

"They tried to create a democratic underclass, but democracy revolted"

In June 2016 the United Kingdom voted to leave the European Union. From the moment the results became clear the political, media, academic and civic establishment reacted with disbelief, soon turning to fury. The self-appointed liberal elite had for so long placed their views and opinions on a moral pedestal, whilst scoffing and looking down their nose at anyone who dared care for tradition, valued patriotism or worst of all committed the ultimate sin of failing to virtue signal as part of the latest hyper-woke fad. These people could simply not understand how the views of the 'little people', mainly made up of working class men and women (the liberal elite will already be tearing the page in fury at my failure to virtue signal with the use of gender neutral pronouns) from council estates without a university degree, could prevail over the views of the elite. The key driving force behind Brexit was a resentment- which had bubbled for decades- at the snobbery, the mockery, and the arrogance of a self-appointed elite- including outlets like the BBC- who thought they had the right to set the parameters of public debate and to act as judge and jury as to which viewpoints were right, and which were wrong. They had tried to create a democratic underclass, and democracy had revolted. In Northern Ireland it was no different. A new heavily nationalist professional class- encompassing large sections of the media, the legal profession and academia- had surfed the wave of the so-called peace process, and for almost 20 years had dominated public discourse. The Belfast Agreement was created that way; its core design was to empower the nationalist community, whilst disempowering the unionist community. For the agreement to advance to its ultimate objective- Irish unification- it is necessary to delegitimise and disenfranchise the main impediment to that trajectory: unionism. The United Kingdom's decision to leave the European Union shook the nationalist professional class to its core, the reverberations of which were evident throughout formerly impartial media institutions- such as the BBC- who struggled to comprehend that any 'credible' person would dissent from the views which were carried by their heavily liberal, middle class and largely pro nationalist virtue signalling workforce. This book contains political and legal writings exploring the Brexit process, and how Northern Ireland was ultimately betrayed. It is argued that the root cause of the betrayal is the Belfast Agreement, which in of itself also necessitated the dehumanisation of the working-class loyalist community. The book is in three parts. It begins with a legal analysis of the undermining of Northern Ireland's constitutional position with the United Kingdom and includes a lecture on the subject of 'The Rule of Law and Brexit'. Part Two contains a selection of writings from the point of the Referendum result to the end of the transition period. In the concluding Part Three a comprehensive legal report on Loyalism's treatment by the media is followed by a selection of writings on the dehumanisation of the loyalist community both in the mainstream media, and online. ABOUT THE AUTHOR Jamie Bryson is a Unionist activist and commentator based in Northern Ireland. He is Editor of Unionist Voice and was formerly a columnist for Belfast Live and contributor for Brexit Central, the UK hub for political and legal analysis of the Brexit process. He is a regular contributor for the Newsletter, and regularly appears on BBC, Sky, Russia Today, RTE, TV3 and in other print media. He works in Public Relations, Law and Advocacy with specific focus on Press Complaints, Sports Appeals and Arbitration, Employment Law and Social Security Law.

This review incorporates the views and visions of 2,000 clinicians and other health and social care professionals from every NHS region in England, and has been developed in discussion with patients, carers and the general public. The changes proposed are locally-led, patient-centred and clinically driven. Chapter 2 identifies the challenges facing the NHS in the 21st century: ever higher expectations; demand driven by demographics as people live longer; health in an age of information and connectivity; the changing nature of disease; advances in treatment; a changing health workplace. Chapter 3 outlines the proposals to deliver high quality care for patients and the public, with an emphasis on helping people to stay healthy, empowering patients, providing the most effective treatments, and keeping patients as safe as possible in healthcare environments. The importance of quality in all aspects of the NHS is reinforced in chapter 4, and must be understood from the perspective of the patient's safety, experience in care received and the effectiveness of that care. Best practice will be widely promoted, with a central role for the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE) in expanding national standards. This will bring clarity to the high standards expected and quality performance will be measured and published. The review outlines the need to put frontline staff in control of this drive for quality (chapter 5), with greater freedom to use their expertise and skill and decision-making to find innovative ways to improve care for patients. Clinical and managerial leadership skills at the local level need further development, and all levels of staff will receive support through education and training (chapter 6). The review recommends the introduction of an NHS Constitution (chapter 7). The final chapter sets out the means of implementation.

This document sets out the priorities for the NHS up to 2008 based on the process of reform set out in the NHS Plan (Cm. 4818-I ISBN 0101481829). It is in three sections. The first 'Laying the foundations' looks at the progress so far in NHS reform. The second section 'Offering a better service' sets out the objectives of the policy under the headings of personalised care, supporting people with long-term conditions, and a healthier and fitter population. One of the aims is to change the NHS from a sickness service to a service that gives a higher priority to the prevention of disease and a reduction of health inequalities. The third section is called 'Making it happen' and it covers investment and diversity of provision, staff and working practices and information systems.

The National Planning Policy Framework 2012 sets out the Government's planning policies for England in achieving sustainable development and how these are expected to be applied. It sets out the requirements for the planning system only to the extent that it is relevant, proportionate and necessary to do so. It provides a framework within which local people and their accountable councils can produce their own distinctive local and neighbourhood plans, which reflect the needs and priorities of their communities. This Framework does not contain specific policies for nationally significant projects for which particular considerations apply. Divided into thirteen chapters, with three annexes, it looks at the following areas, including: building a competitive economy; ensuring town centre vitality; supporting a high quality communications infrastructure; delivering high quality homes; protecting the Green Belt; meeting the challenges of climate change, flooding and coastal change; conserving the natural and historic environments and facilitating the sustainable use of minerals.
