"An exceptional writer."--Michael Blake, Dances With Wolves // Apryl Greene, now in her early 40s, is a musician and photographer for labor unions, and a hippie who never lost her principles. While others in the '80s and '90s are working to own a piece of America, she is working to improve it by building the first public School for Peace. Award-winning journalist Walter Brasch proves he is a master of the literary vignette as he meticulously builds a scenario of greed, corruption, and intrigue, set against the backdrop of social protest. In so doing he weaves a compelling story of history and contemporary American culture. The time frame is 1964 to Jan. 15, 1991, the eve of the Persian Gulf War.
