Murder is Easy (1939) Towards Zero (1944) Battle is notable for his stolid good sense, and he relies in part on the appearance of being a stupid or unimaginative police officer as a means to investigating his cases. His moustache is impressive, even to Hercule Poirot. In Cards on the Table, Battle is described as a "big, square, wooden-faced man". He conveys the impression that he is "carved out of wood", and also that the wood in question is "the timber out of a battleship".
