Mary Stewart, author of many bestselling novels, has been often compared with the Brontë sisters. Her 1960 classic My Brother

Michael, with its superb mingling of romance and suspense, its vivid descriptions and overtone of impending disaster, is further evidence that the comparison is richly deserved.

And Camilla and Simon's walk in the ruins of Delphi earlier is a prime example of why I love Mary Stewart's writing & again- she really knows how to write atmospheric novels! My Brother Michael probably isn't my favorite of Stewart's books, since it tends to meander a bit, but I did enjoy it quite a lot.

Mary Stewart is one of my favorite authors, and My Brother Michael is one of her best. Jasmine Blackborow is a perfect narrator, with great enunciation, steady volume, and narrative flow, with enough differences in characters' voices to identify them without going overboard as some narrators do. She made the story come alive.
