"Need More Love" is a brilliant visual memoir of Baby Boomer/hippie/sixties'artiste/ culture. In equal measure self loathing & self obsessed, Aline is funny, brutally honest, and above all, unapologetic. Her sometimes squalid accounts of family life, childhood, adolescence, skewed body image (& the resulting adult sexuality issues) are, for the most part, dead on.

A blog about Aline Kominsky Crumb's Memoir. Largely hailed as among the first to start creating autobiography comics, Kominsky rode the the swell of open-minded acceptance that came with the 60's (). Not only that, but she was also one of the key members of Wimmen's Comix, which encouraged women to create comics during a time where the industry was nearly completely male-driven.
