This is a book for people in the academic or business aspects of the medical industry, medical professionals doing research or looking for a job, medical students, patients and anyone else interested in the United States and Canada infrastructure of medical organization and hospital websites. I focused on American, Canadian and some UK medical organizations and hospitals in this book which made it good-sized already without dipping into my world medical book which offers medical resources for most countries. I created an American medical job book and a general American medical book which were both quite long so I took information about medical organizations and hospitals out of them and created a separate book. As far as information about American-Canadian medical organization and hospital websites go, there is no book or database anywhere that comes close to this one. It ' s for the medical professional who wants this information at their fingertips all in one place. I got a bunch of medical organization and hospital websites from a website called theagepecenter.com then it disappeared. A German outfit has taken the name over. The original website probably exists at archive.org. Dmoz.org was a human-filtered search site with good lists. It disappeared but is archived at dmoz-odp.org. It had a lot of good information on it. Beyond that, I put the lists of medical organizations and hospitals that I found all over the place in this book. I ' m not repeating information in this book that is already in my other books. The colonias of the U.S. – Mexico border form a loose network of more than 2,500 settlements, ranging in size from villages to cities, that are home to over a million people. While varying in size, all share common features: wrenching poverty, substandard housing, and public health issues approaching crisis levels. This book brings together scholars, professionals, and activists from a wide range of disciplines to examine the pressing issues of economic development, housing and community development, and public and environmental health in colonias of the four U.S. – Mexico border states. The Colonias Reader is the first book to present such a broad overview of these communities, offering a glimpse into life in the colonias and the circumstances that allow them to continue to exist—and even grow—in persistent poverty. The contributors document the depth of existing problems in each state and describe how government agencies, nongovernmental organizations, and community activists have mobilized resources to overcome obstacles to progress. More than reporting problems and documenting programs, the book provides conceptual frameworks that tie poverty to institutional and class-based conflicts, and even challenges the very basis of colonia designations. Most of these contributions move beyond portraying border residents as hapless victims of discrimination and racism, showing instead their devotion to improving their own living conditions through grassroots organizing and community leadership. These contributions show that, despite varying degrees of success, all colonia residents aspire to a livable wage, safe and decent housing, and basic health care. The Colonias Reader showcases many situations in which these people have organized to fulfill these ambitions and provides new insight into life along the border.

In 1917, five years after New Mexico received its statehood, the United States entered World War I. With border tensions festering between Mexico and the United States, Germany attempted unsuccessfully to secure Mexico's allegiance with its Zimmermann Telegram. More than sixteen thousand New Mexicans joined the military, while civilians supported from the home front. Groups like the Knights of Columbus, YMCA and the Salvation Army, as well as Governor W.E. Lindsey's New Mexico Council of Defense, raised military funding. Author Daniel R. Cillis recounts the Land of Enchantment's influence on World War I from its beginning through to the 1918 Armistice.

Through use of practical examples and a plainspoken narrative style that minimises the use of maths, this book demystifies data concepts, sources, and methods for public service professionals interested in understanding economic and social issues at the regional level. By blending elements of a general interest book, a textbook, and a reference book, it equips civic leaders, public administrators, urban planners, nonprofit executives, philanthropists, journalists, and graduate students in various public affairs disciplines to wield social and economic data for the benefit of their communities. While numerous books about quantitative research exist, few focus specifically on the public sector. Running the Numbers, in contrast, explores a wide array of topics of regional importance, including economic output, demographics, business structure, labour markets, and income, among many others. To that end, the book stresses practical applications, minimises the use of maths, and employs extended, chapter-length examples that demonstrate how analytical tools can illuminate the social and economic workings of actual American regions.

Please Try Your Call Again Later is my story of fighting like hell for assistance that was allegedly available to everyone during the COVID-19 Pandemic. Like many people, COVID-19 impacted my income severely, and brought my work as a consumer advocate to a standstill. Stimulus money, PPP loans, and child tax credits kept many afloat during this time. Amended rules allowed me to apply for unemployment benefits. More than 18 months later, I am at a stalemate to be fully approved. I have called over a thousand times to the New Mexico Department of Workforce Solutions (NMDWS) just to be hung up on. According to media reports, The State of New Mexico at one point was only answering 6% of calls! The three times I connected with an associate only led to additional issues to my application. Help has never seemed so far away. The experience I have endured has eerie parallels to the customer service ineptitude of the banking industry, which I worked in for 13 years. I explain that while we applauded companies for stepping up customer service during the first part of COVID-19, the foot is definitely off the gas pedal now. This book details every insane step made by me asking for help, as well as every insane misstep made by the state. I share my stories of interacting with an outdated website, and an overworked, overwhelmed apathetic staff at NMDWS. I also discuss how this experience has shown me how the less fortunate are left behind and ridiculed for asking for help, which in turn has changed my mindset to be a person who gives back to the community that gave me success. I also get personal and discuss the health and financial hurdles NMDWS has thrown my way by screwing up my case and the cases of others. It's a story you never believe can happen to you...Until it happens to you. If the state doesn't want to pay me the money rightfully available to me by law, then, what the hell? Let's write a book about how awful they have been to me and others, sell it for a fair price, make that money back, and give some of it to great causes as a unique way of sticking it to the man! 15% of all net proceeds from this book will go to benefit a couple of non-profit organizations. Please follow my Twitter account @bankbetterguy for more info.

This fourth volume in the Current Perspectives on School/University/Community Research series brings together the perspectives of authors who are deeply committed to the integration of digital technology with teaching and learning. Authors were invited to discuss either a completed project, a work-in-progress, or a theoretical approach which aligned with one of the trends highlighted by the New Media Consortium 's NMC/CoSN Horizon Report: 2017 K-12 Edition, or to consider how the confluence of interest and action (Thompson, Martinez, Clinton, & D í az, 2017) among school-university-community collaborative partners in the digital technology in education space resulted in improved outcomes for all—where “ all ” is broadly conceived and consists of the primary beneficiaries (the students) as well as the providers of the educational opportunities and various subsets of the community in which the integrative endeavors are enacted. The chapters in this volume are grouped into four sections: Section 1 includes two chapters that focus on computational thinking/coding in the arts (music and visual arts); Section 2 includes three chapters that focus on the instructor in the classroom, preservice teacher preparation, and pedagogy; Section 3 includes four chapters that focus on building the academic proficiency of students; and Section 4 includes two chapters that focus on the design and benefits of school-university-community collaboration.
