Great review! I bought the newer model, Nikon L35AF2, and was also amazed by sharpness of a lens and overall quality. Only thing I missed was a manual ISO setting for pushing and that was the reason to “downgrade” to this previous model. I haven’t yet developed my first roll shot with this camera, but I’m excited to see the results!

My guess is they knew there was an issue though because the manual has an atypically specific section on battery selection. Either way later models seem much more forgiving.

The Nikon L35AF. came out in 1983, and was Nikon’s first autofocus compact camera. There were more models to follow, including the Nikon L35AD , with a time stamp back, Nikon L35 AW AF , which stood for “All Weather”, and eventually the L35AF2 and L35AF3 .

Nikon L35AF was Nikon's first autofocus compact camera.

After using a few cameras of this type for a while (namely the Yashicas T3 & T4, a Pentax Espio Mini, the Olympus Mju-II, and the (manual focus) XA) I now primarily use the Nikon – and I guess the reason for this is 50% due to image quality / the way the lens renders, and 50% due to the camera’s features, and the “I do want to take this ...

The Nikon L35AF is a bit of a cult classic in certain circles it seems. I’ve written about the Nikon AF3, the 3rd iteration of this camera, but when I was writing about it I couldn’t help wonder if I was missing anything in the first version. Especially as I’d read a number of times that the first one had the better lens.

The L35AF was Nikon's first compact camera with autofocus. It was released in 1983, a few years after Nikon's competitors had opened up the point and shoot market. It was therefore also the first in the L series. It was an immediate hit thanks to its robust design and excellent specification. It...
