This book discusses human-machine interactions, specifically focusing on making them as natural as human-human interaction. It is based on the premise that to get the right connect between human and machines, it is essential to understand not only the behavior of the person interacting with the machine, but also the limitations of the technology. Firstly, the authors review the evolution of language as a spontaneous, natural phenomenon in the overall scheme of the evolutionary development of living beings. They then go on to examine the possible approaches to understanding and representing the meaning and the common aspects of human-human and human-machine interactions, and introduce the keyconcept-keyword (also called minimal parsing) approach as a convenient and realistic way to implement usable human-machine interface (HMI) systems. For researchers looking for practical approaches, way beyond the realms of theory, this book is a must read.

A comprehensive archaeological study of the ceramic finds from a house in Amheida The House of Serenos: Part I: The Pottery (Amheida V) is a comprehensive full-color catalog and analysis of the ceramic finds from the late antique house of a local notable and adjacent streets in Amheida. It is the fifth book in the Amheida series. Amheida is located in the western part of the Dakhla oasis, 3.5 km south of the medieval town of El-Qasr. Known in Hellenistic and Roman times as Trimithis, Amheida became a polis by 304 CE and was a major administrative center of the western part of the oasis for the whole of the fourth century. The home's owner was one Serenos, a member of the municipal elite and a Trimithis city councillor, as we know from documents found in the house. His house is particularly well preserved with respect to floor plan, relationship to the contemporary urban topography, and decoration, including domestic display spaces plastered and painted with subjects drawn from Greek mythology and scenes depicting the family that owned the house. The archaeology from the site also reveals the ways in which the urban space changed over time, as Serenos's house was built over and expanded into some previously public spaces. The house was probably abandoned around or soon after 370 CE. The pottery analyzed in this volume helps to refine the relationship of the archaeological layers belonging to the elite house and the layers below it; it also sheds light on the domestic and economic life of the household and region, from cooking and dining to the management of a complex agricultural economy in which ceramics were the most common form of container for basic commodities. The book will be of interest to specialists interested in ceramology, Roman Egypt, and the material culture, social history, and economy of late antiquity.

His friends and family would say it started when he got arrested. He knows it started long before that. Seventeen-year-old CHRISTIAN GRANT has spent the last two years in a drunken haze. He clutches a bottle to release the grip his nightmares have on him and to forget a friend's cold-case disappearance, another friend's frightening sickness and the suffocating stigma of being a nobody from Oasis. The truth comes out when he is found hanging upside down from his seatbelt, trapped inside the wreckage of his truck, and he is arrested for drunk driving. Sobriety proves to be difficult for him after he gets out of jail, but the way his world shifts proves it to be worth it. Christian lives in a world divided. Several decades ago, the world split into four Quarters—Northern, Eastern, Southern, and Western—then branched out into Territories and further into Regions. The Region of Oasis, ironically named, is a crumbling hellhole rebuked by the rest of the Quarter; its citizens are unkindly referred to as Nobodies. Each Quarter is ruled by a Council, and in the Northern Quarter, a secretive Councilman is slowly squashing the life out of Oasis. All his life, Christian believed he'd never get out, but when he returns home to a mysterious message on his wall—sys—and an enigmatic new girl in school named VICTORIA WINTER, he begins to think otherwise. Not even SAM WILLIAMS, Christian's best friend, can decode the message, nor can he provide any answers for the mysterious presence in Christian's nightmares. The questions are unavoidable and unbearable until Christian stumbles upon some answers about his family, his past, and himself, and comes to two horrifying understandings. He sees connections he previously overlooked and finds out some questions are better left unresolved. His discovery starts him on a journey he never believed he 'd go on... and that he may not be ready for. His friends and family would say it started when he got arrested. He knows it started long before that.

Oasis of Truth HC Pro, Inc.

This book examines why the religion-science skirmishes known as the Evolution Wars have persisted into the 21st century. It does so by considering the influences of mass media in relation to decision-making research and the Elaboration Likelihood Model, one of the most authoritative persuasion theories. The book 's analysis concentrates on the expression of cues, or cognitive mental shortcuts, in Darwin-sceptic and counter-creationist broadcasts. A multiyear collection of media generated by the most prominent Darwin-sceptic organizations is surveyed, along with rival publications from supporters of evolutionary theory described as the pro-evolutionists. The analysed materials include works produced by Young Earth Creationist and Intelligent Design media makers, New Atheist pacesetters, as well as both agnostic and religious supporters of evolution. These cues are shown to function as subtle but effective means of shaping public opinion, including appeals to expertise, claims that ideas are being censored, and the tactical use of statistics and technical jargon. Contending that persuasive mass media is a decisive component of science-religion controversies, this book will be of keen interest to scholars of Religion, Science and Religion interactions, as well as researchers of Media and Communication Studies more generally.

Filled with busy stores and happy families, Opal also wants you to know that "everyone looks like me." In both words and illustrations, this carefully researched and historically accurate book allows children to experience the joys and success of Greenwood, one of the most prosperous Black communities of the early 20th Century, an area Booker T. Washington dubbed America's Black Wall Street. Soon after the day narrated by Opal, Greenwood would be lost in the Tulsa Race Massacre, the worst act of racial violence in American history. As we approach the centennial of that tragic event, children have the opportunity through this book to learn and celebrate all that was built in Greenwood.
