The concept of erga omnes obligations in international law

Should a State submit an application to the International Court of Justice in relation to the alleged breach of an obligation which is set out in the interest of all States or of all the State parties to a treaty (obligation erga omnes), there is an issue of the State's standing when it acts only in that interest. Another issue is whether the dispute then comes under the applicable jurisdictional clause or the parties' declarations of acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction.

An obligation erga omnes, in contrast, is one that is owed to the international community as a whole. The legal effect of such a characterisation is the generation of a procedural right of standing, on the part of all states, to invoke the responsibility of a state that is in breach of this obligation.

Erga omnes - Wikipedia

International law. In international law, it has been used as a legal term describing obligations owed by states towards the community of states as a whole. An erga omnes obligation exists because of the universal and undeniable interest in the perpetuation of critical rights (and the prevention of their breach). Consequently, any state has the right to complain of a breach.
