Open regionalism in the Asia-Pacific / The Japan Times

(Document Summary) Asian regionalism is explored from the perspective that regions do not just exist as material objects in the world, but also as social and cognitive constructs that are rooted in political practice. With specific reference to Asia and the financial crisis of 1997, the following themes are explored: 1.

Open Regionalism is regional economic cooperation without discrimination against countries outside the region. The concept grew from the experience of rapid growth, and expanding trade and investment across national borders, in East Asia and the Pacific. It became the guiding idea of Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation.

New regionalist projects, which began about the mid-1980s, differed in substance from the earlier rise in regionalist developments, which had begun about the 1950s and later became known by the term old regionalism. The emergence of new regionalism coincided with the end of the Cold War and a period of increasing global economic integration. Its development ultimately led to regional organizations that were more open with respect to trade than those that had formed in the era of old regionalism.

A NEW OPEN REGIONALISM

Asian regionalism is emerging against the backdrop of a remarkable half century of economic development. In the four decades from 1956 to 1996, East Asian living standards—as measured by real (inflation- adjusted) output per person—rose at a rate faster than has ever been sustained anywhere else.

"Open regionalism" has been adopted as a fundamental principle of the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) 2 organization from its creation in 1989. The 18 nations of APEC account for about one half of world output and world trade. The institution includes the three largest economies in the world - the United States, Japan and China.

Chapter 2 Asian Regionalism: Context and Scope

Another step that ASEAN might take on the road to greater regionalism is to open itself to the possibility of taking regional action to help a member-country deal with internal difficulties that have regional or international dimensions; assist member-countries in resolving disputes between them; and keep actions and policies of one member-country from seriously harming others.
