In my heart, Lucille and I were the pack, that pack of two, and Michael stood just outside the circle, close enough to be near it but a safe distance away from the center. This feeling wasn't just a by-product of ambivalence toward Michael, or toward the idea of making a deeper commitment to him, both of which were realities that predated Lucille by some time.

While Caroline Knapp chose the title Pack of Two, she presents maybe (I didn't count) 200 packs of two packed with study results. I wasn't prepared for tidbits about one dog-person relationship after another plus analysis reinforced by study after study. I should have paid more attention to the subtitle: The Intricate Bond Between People and Dogs.
