When I do that, turning on my G20 turns the Onkyo ON, and sets it to TV and plays sound via the onboard tuner to the amp, then switching AV to HDMI2 on the TV switches the AMP to Cbl/Sat mode and plays the input selected on the AV amp. Works great. (in other words, the ONLY cables going to my G20 are HDMI, Ethernet, Power and Antenna.)

Panasonic G20 builds on Panasonic's design tradition, and although the TV is a bit thinner in 2010 Panasonic has kept the glossy black look with round and soft edges. On the other hand most of you consumers out there will probably be pleased by the fact the G20 has no active fans on the back.

Panasonic has made efforts to improve picture quality on G30 and it is an improvement compared to the popular G20 model. Color accuracy is great with the THX preset – something not often seen with mid-range TVs – and black depth has been improved to compete with some of the best TVs on the market.

Panasonic's G20 series is strictly 2D and offers 50- and 54-inch models. As of this writing, they are exclusive to Best Buy stores. If you shop for either set elsewhere, you'll have to opt for another Panasonic line. The G25 models appear to be nearly the same as the G20s and include identical prices for sets of the same size.
