And if you've never owned one before, a panini press is a type of contact grill used to apply pressure to both sides of a panini (an Italian-style sandwich) as it's toasted. The ribbed top and bottom plates of the panini press stay parallel as you lower the top plate onto the food, toasting your food evenly and giving it those fabulous "grill" marks that seemingly make food taste even better.

A panini press may or may not come with a temperature control. If you are going to use a panini press to also prepare other foods such as pizzas or burgers then you should go with a one that has temperature settings rather than the pre-set panini press. Drip Tray . A drip tray is important since it collects all of the juices that drip from the press into a tray which can be easily disposed of, rather than messing up the kitchen countertop.

#5. Hamilton Beach 25462Z Panini Press Gourmet Sandwich Maker. Another great option for those looking for a lower price point, the Hamilton model heats up hot, delicious sandwiches of any size quickly, and wipes down clean. It is a little more expensive than the Oster model mentioned above, but I would assume that's due to its larger size.
