Passions are in Descartes a real curiosity: in fact, Descartes is the thinker of the cogitor, i.e. the certainty of the subject ' s existence, that it to say an activity. But the passions are the dimension of passivity, the flaw that undermines man ' s free will. Thus, Descartes poses the problem of the passions as the problem of the action of the body (movement) and the actions of the soul ...

1650 AD) "When Descartes formulated his ideas of l'homme machine whose functions like those of the animal body could be explained mechanistically, he was faced with the difficulty of how to account for the mind or soul of man — this fundamental difference between him and animals and the essence of the body (or brain)— mind relation. The Passions of the Soul - Ren é Descartes - Google Books Ren é Descartes wrote a book, The Passions of the Soul, 1 presents a strong view of dualism. In this sense, it is similar to Plato's view of the soul, where Plato posited a soul who guides the body much like a helmsmen who pilots a ship. Descartes began by correctly noting there is an important difference between animate and inanimate bodies. The Passions of the Soul by Ren é Descartes Passions is Descartes ' last published work, finished in 1649. Its 212 articles constitute the final statement of the philosophy of the mental, and represent his effort to pull together the best of his correspondence pertaining to the soul with Princess Elisabeth of Bohemia, to whom the book is dedicated. In the late 20th and early 21st centuries, it is quite common for philosophers to accuse Descartes of ignoring the visceral and emotional aspects of life and equating all thought with reason alone. In THE PASSIONS OF THE SOUL he belies this reading with the proclamation, "all the good and evil of this life depend on [the passions] alone".
