Press Advertising is everywhere. By some estimates, the average American is exposed to over 3,000 advertisements each day. Whether we realize it or not, "adcreep"—modern marketing's march to create a world where advertising can be expected anywhere and anytime—has come, transforming not just our purchasing decisions, but our relationships, our sense of self, and the way we navigate all spaces, public and private. Adcreep journeys through the curious and sometimes troubling world of modern advertising. Mark Bartholomew exposes an array of marketing techniques that might seem like the stuff of science fiction: neuromarketing, biometric scans, automated online spies, and facial recognition technology, all enlisted to study and stimulate consumer desire. This marriage of advertising and technology has consequences. Businesses wield rich and portable records of consumer preference, delivering advertising tailored to your own idiosyncratic thought processes. They mask their role by using social media to mobilize others, from celebrities to your own relatives, to convey their messages. Guerrilla marketers turn every space into a potential site for a commercial come-on or clandestine market research. Advertisers now know you on a deeper, more intimate level, dramatically tilting the historical balance of power between advertiser and audience. In this world of ubiquitous commercial appeals, consumers and policymakers are numbed to advertising's growing presence. Drawing on a variety of sources, including psychological experiments, marketing texts, communications theory, and historical examples, Bartholomew reveals the consequences of life in a world of non-stop selling. Adcreep mounts a damning critique of the modern American legal system's failure to stem the flow of invasive advertising into our homes, parks, schools, and digital lives.

Although McDonald's tested the McCafe' concept--offering specialty coffee and smoothies--many years before the recession hit, the official launch took place in early 2009. Why? Because they knew that was when Starbucks' market share was most vulnerable. And, in early 2010, McDonald's raked in $420m, not only stealing a staggering amount of business from Starbucks, but applying so much pressure that in 2009, Starbucks closed over 270 locations. If you want to grow in a slowly recovering economy...a stagnant economy...or even a declining market, your best and only plan is to steal market share from your competitors and to remain reactive to the market's needs. Grab More Market Share will teach professionals how not settle for 1% growth. Ross' research uses rock-solid case studies that teach leaders to leverage the recovery to steal 10-15% market share from competitors. Ross alerts readers to the fact that they must leverage the culture (the public consciousness) to swing dollars towards their organizations.

This same discipline will help professionals predict the next human behavior changes in buying habits.

switchover, scheduled for 2015, unless the Government make the case for switchover and keep the public informed about its impact. There is 'public confusion and industry uncertainty' over radio switchover and concern that due to the lack of public information people are still buying analogue radios which will be out of date in a few years time. Retailers gave evidence stating that they are not getting adequate information on switchover plans so are unable to offer consumers accurate guidance when making purchases. The report also points out that car manufacturers are still fitting analogue radios in new cars and digital radios will not be fitted as standard in all cars until 2013. The radio switchover is contrasted with the television switchover programme, finding that the benefits of TV switchover were well understood, in contrast surveys show that the public are generally happy with the present FM radio system and with the range of programmes that are provided. The Committee recommends urgent steps on a range of actions including: providing a detailed plan for universal digital radio coverage including how it is to be funded; developing a policy for the long term use of FM; devising a help scheme for radio switchover financed by general taxation rather than the BBC licence fee; ensuring new digital car radios are fitted with a multi-standard chip to enable their use overseas; encouraging radio manufacturers and retailers to devise a sensible scrappage scheme for redundant analogue radios. It is also noted that the BBC and Government disagree over whether the cost of universal digital coverage of their national stations can be met under the current licence fee. The report says that it is essential that a 'firm and unambiguous' plan for funding the completion of build-out of the digital radio service is put in place as soon as possible. The report concludes reversing current policy would be unproductive given the amount of investment in digital radio already and while the switchover in 2015 is ambitious a change of target date is not favoured at this stage.

Camping And Escape From Civilization!

Camping is a favorite pastime and at one point or the other, something many of us have done.

Whether you have camped in your backyard with the intention of stargazing, or whether you have done it in the wild where you were open to the elements and one with nature, camping is good for you. Other than being a fantastic activity that provides a way to have fun and connect with loved ones and nature, being in nature and under the open sky has a wide range of health benefits that traverse the physical and the mental. Of the many benefits of camping, one of the greatest one is that it acts as a total unplug from the modern day world of the internet and connected devices.

If you do camping right, i.e. if you plan well, you will find no use for the internet while you are camping. Further to this, because you will be out of the city where every city block offers free WI-FI and the notifications on your device never stop stealing your attention, you will experience the peace and tranquility that comes with unplugging and being one with the present moment. This total unplug from the connected world is very good for you because when you are not constantly looking at your phone, worrying if someone texted, emailed, or PMed, commented on your photos or wanting to Instagram every flower or scenery you see in nature, you can truly enjoy the experience and earnestly enjoy the company of those around you. This is invaluable. NOTE: This does not mean you should not bring your phone. Bring it along in case of emergencies. However, keep it turned off so you can sustain battery life and focus on being one with nature throughout your camping. Camping is indeed fun. However, for it to be fun, you need to get a few things right. You are probably wondering, "OK, I want to make sure my camping trip is fun. Which things should I get right?" That amazing question shows your desire for knowledge. This guide is going to detail-to the tiniest bit-everything you need to know about planning for a camping trip in nature. The content in this guide shall help you untether from modern day civilization-at least for a while-and immerse yourself in a raw world, the natural world. In addition, most of what we shall discuss applies whether you are going on a solo camping trip or whether you are taking your family away on an amazing camping trip getaway. If you keep in mind the many tips, tricks, and strategies in this guide, your camping trip shall be one for the memory books. Let's begin. Here Is Just A Small Preview Of What You'll Learn...
