Penelope Fitzgerald (1916-2000) was a great English writer, who would never have described herself in such grand terms. Her novels were short, spare masterpieces, self-concealing, oblique and subtle. She won the Booker Prize for her novel Offshore in 1979, and her last work, The Blue Flower, was acclaimed as a work of genius. The early novels drew on her own experiences – a boat on the Thames in the 1960s; the BBC in war time; a failing bookshop in Suffolk; an eccentric stage-school.

Penelope Fitzgerald - Wikipedia
Penelope Mary Fitzgerald (17 December 1916 - 28 April 2000) was a Booker Prize-winning novelist, poet, essayist and biographer from Lincoln, England. In 2008 The Times listed her among "the 50 greatest British writers since 1945". The Observer in 2012 placed her final novel, The Blue Flower, among "the ten best historical novels".

From the margins: Hermione Lee on Penelope Fitzgerald ...

In the last three decades of her life, Penelope Fitzgerald (1916-2000) published three biographies and nine novels, and became one of the most admired English novelists of her time. Four of her novels were shortlisted for the Booker prize - Offshore won in 1979 - and her last novel, The Blue Flower (1995), won the US National Book Critics Circle award almost two decades later.

Anyone, like myself, who has enjoyed the novels of Penelope Fitzgerald for over forty years, this biography, by Hermione Lee will be a welcome addition to the bookshelf. Penelope Fitzgerald had, by any yardstick, a life that was varied, difficult, and at times tragic. Despite her seeming advantages of a high profile intellectual family, with a degree from Oxford, a zest for life and opportunity, in later years she ends up, with her family on a sinking Thames barge !!
