Gerard Manley Hopkins SJ (28 July 1844 – 8 June 1889) was an English poet and Jesuit priest, whose posthumous fame established him among the leading Victorian poets. His manipulation of prosody – particularly his concept of sprung rhythm and use of imagery – established him as an innovative writer of verse.

When I think of verse in English in the 19th century, what generally comes to mind is the fairly regular verse of people like the Romantic poets, Wordsworth, Keats, Shelley and Byron, or the even more regular verse of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow in America, or Alfred Lord Tennyson in Britain.

Book Review: Poems and Prose by Gerard Manley Hopkins | Mboten

This was a remarkably prophetic poem for Manley Hopkins's first "beautiful child," Gerard, born only a year after this poem was published. The phrase "And birds that call/Hoarse to the storm," invites comparison with the son's images of the windhover rebuffing the big wind in "The Windhover" (1877) and with the image of the great storm fowl at the conclusion of "Henry Purcell" (1879).
