The take-away is that Nielsen, as a scientist, is addressing his peers on topics that are also important to librarians. Perhaps Nielsen's Reinventing Discovery: The Era of Networked Science will be the impetus for 'lighting an almighty fire under the scientific community' in creating an open scientific culture.

...

Michael Nielsen wrote Reinventing Discovery because he wants to light an almighty fire under the scientific community, and it's a good metaphor. Even after humans had discovered fire, for thousands of years life went on much the same. Then we invented science, the fire of the mind, and the speed of change increased dramatically.
