In 1984 the Saab "B202" engine was introduced, that pawed the way for the modern turbocharged 4-cylinder engine. Saab added a 16 valve cylinder head with double overhead camshafts. They retroactively renamed the 8-valve version the B201 and used B202 as the name of the new multi-valve unit. Another notable addition to the B202 was hydraulic valve lifters and Ecopower ("ep" in Italy, "(900)S" elsewhere), with a pre-heated catalytic converter for reduced emissions.

The Non-Turbo models use a Distributor, and Leads to each Spark Plug, while the Turbocharged engines utilise Saab's Trionic engine management system which works hand in hand with the Direct Ignition Module (or Cassette) mounted to the top of the engine, directly connecting to the spark plugs.

Trionic 5 was used on the B204 Engines, and Trionic 7 was introduced with the B2x5 Engines.

Saab engine smoking. I was at a stop sign when the power steering suddenly went out and the engine started smoking. The temperature gauge was normal. I was about a minute from home so I turned around and drove it back home (possibly a bad idea). The serpentine belt had basically completely crumbled to pieces, as well as the idler pulley.
